SHOCK ABSORBER ASSEMBLY

The Function of shock absorber and spring

The shock absorber spring assembly is mainly composed of a shock absorber and a shock absorber spring.

The shock-absorbing spring is an energy storage component and plays a buffering role; the shock absorber is an energy-consuming component and plays a vibration-absorbing role.

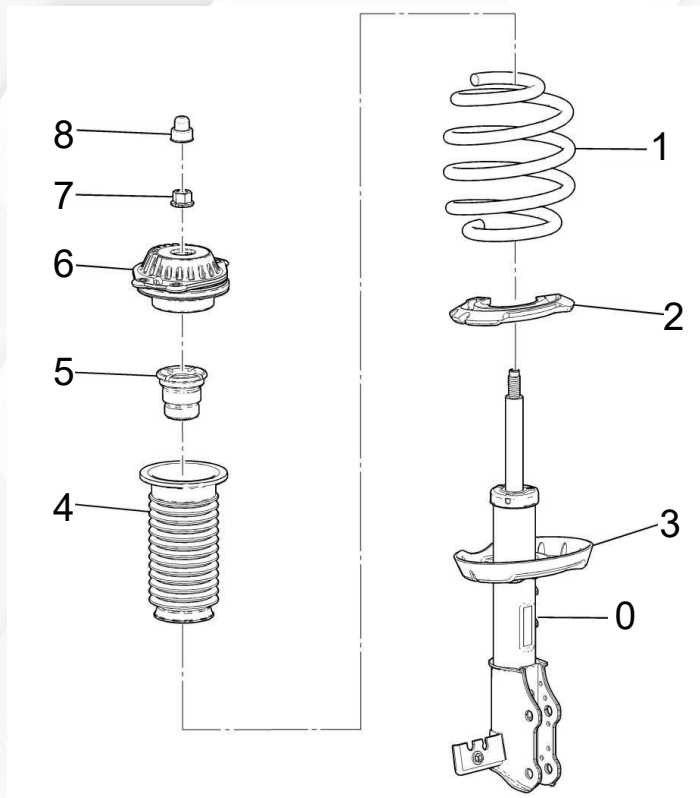

The main function of a shock absorber spring is to store and release energy. When a vehicle drives on an uneven road surface, the wheels will be subject to shock and vibration from the road surface. These shocks and vibrations will be transmitted to the vehicle body, causing unnecessary shaking and bumps in the vehicle body. Through its elastic properties, the shock absorber spring is able to absorb these shocks and vibrations and convert them into spring compression or tension, thereby reducing the shaking and bumps of the vehicle body.

However, damping springs alone cannot completely eliminate vehicle body vibrations. When a spring compresses or stretches, it creates a rebound force that can cause the vehicle body to continue to vibrate after an impact. At this point, the shock absorber plays a key role.

The main function of the shock absorber is to suppress the rebound and vibration of the spring. When the spring is compressed or stretched by an impact, the shock absorber will respond quickly and consume the rebound energy of the spring through its internal damping effect. In this way, when the spring attempts to return to its original shape, the shock absorber prevents it from rebounding too quickly, thus reducing the vibration of the body.

Therefore, the combined use of shock absorbers and shock absorbing springs can more effectively reduce the vibration and shaking of the vehicle body, and improve the vehicle's driving smoothness and control stability. When designing and selecting a suspension system, it is necessary to properly match shock absorbers and shock absorbing springs according to the specific use and performance requirements of the vehicle to achieve the best vibration reduction effect.

The structure of shock absorber spring assembly :

- 0 Shock Absorber
- 1 Shock Absorber Spring
- 2 Lower Spring Seats
- 3 Spring Seat
- 4 Dust Jacket
- 5 Shock Absorbing Pads
- 6 Upper Spring Seat
- 7 Nuts
- 8 Top Glue

How the shock absorber spring assembly works:

When a car is driving on the road, the wheels will jump up and down due to uneven road surfaces. The process of jumping up is called the compression stroke, and the process of jumping down is called the extension stroke.

During the compression stroke, the vertical vibration caused by the uneven road surface is transmitted from the tire to the spring, and the spring is compressed. At this time, the spring only temporarily stores the vibration energy and does not consume it. At the same time, the shock absorber also undergoes compression. Due to the internal valve system of the shock absorber, there are many small intercepting holes. During the reciprocating motion, the shock absorber oil can convert mechanical energy into thermal energy and transfer it to the cylinder tube, where it is air-cooled. It is dissipated in a certain way and plays the role of energy dissipation and vibration reduction.

During the expansion stroke, the spring will change from compression to expansion, which can also be called recovery. During the recovery stroke, the spring releases the energy stored in the compression stroke, which means that the function of the spring is to delay the release of part of the mechanical vibration energy.

At the same time, the shock absorber also converts from compression to expansion. In this process, the shock absorber is still converting mechanical energy into heat energy and dissipating it outward.

Therefore, it is obvious that the spring absorbs and stores vibration energy during the compression stroke and releases it during the extension stroke; The shock absorber, regardless of the compression stroke or the expansion stroke, consumes vibration energy, which is commonly known as "vibration reduction".
